Almshouses – Did you know?
Originally almshouses were called ‘bede’ houses or ‘hospitals’ in the sense of shelters and places of hospitality.

It was during the late 16th century that the medieval craft guilds founded many ‘hospitals’ to provide care for the elderly in their declining years. Today, links with these city livery companies remain strong, with many still retaining their own almshouses. Famous amongst these benefactors was the Mercer, Richard (Dick) Whittington.

Almshouses are managed by almshouse charities, whose trustees are recruited locally and who have local accountability.

Residents pay a weekly maintenance contribution. This is similar to rent but very different in law. The contribution is less than a commercial rent rate and should not cause hardship or distress to residents.

Nearly all market towns in the UK have an almshouse or almshouses.

Almshouses cannot be bought under a ‘right to buy’. They remain as a permanent part of the community in perpetuity meaning generation after generation of local people in housing need can live in a secure place they call home.

Almshouses are a sanctuary, a supportive retreat and part of an integrated ‘micro-community’ that respects independent living.

Almshouse charities are regulated by the Charity Commission.

At The Almshouse Association, it is our vision for almshouses to be at the forefront of the community housing concept, providing an ‘exemplar housing model’.

At a time when there is a severe shortage of affordable local rental accommodation, the role of an almshouse charity is now more vital than ever.

In some rural areas, almshouses are the only provider of affordable, community housing.

Almshouse charities provide accommodation for those in local housing need. Needs are often based on the requirements of the local community at a specific time and are also guided by the wishes of the almshouse benefactor.

More almshouses are being built today than have been since the Victorian era; some have no age restrictions and are able to accommodate families, people with disabilities and key workers.
